Sharing Table Saturday 13 February 2020

Thank you to the three makers who brought their work and opened the sharing space for a new year!

Isobel Burchell brought soft comfortable socks knitted in a plummy purple coloured commercial wool. She had also knitted a pair of ethereal looking "Ghostly Mitts", white and lacy, in Blue-faced Leicester from a pattern by Interweave Knits Winter 2021 which were absolutely gorgeous.

Gail Hamilton is also starting the year with socks. One pair were Fifteens by Ros Clarke with a purple stripe pattern and the other short and sweet with blue stripes, very cute, were confusedly (to an uninitiated sock knitter like me) labelled Pink Lemonade by Amy Rapp! They turned out beautifully, Gail, even if you got the colour wrong!

Mylene Pijpers, new to our Guild but not Crafting or to Craft House, shared with us a delectable, grey, 'Romi Hill Cottage' shawl knitted in soft, soft possum and wool yarn which was a souvenir of New Zealand (see photo on front cover). Thank you and welcome, Mylene. We hope to see more of your work.

I assumed that everyone else was hoarding their making masterpieces (or in my case, efforts) to bring to the Showcase, now in April! Happy New Textile Year, Everyone!

Brenda Roy

Oops!...

The last edition of the Yarnspinner should have said:

Gail Hamilton knitted a super soft shawl using Nunnaba 4ply yarn and the 'Sharon Show' pattern by Casapinka

Gail used Nunnaba 4ply again to knit 'The Secret Handshake' cowl, also a Casapinka design.

Let them eat seaweed!

Sian Tarrant (known online as woollygreen-jumper) is a marine biologist who has worked in all kinds of isolated places in Scotland and Chile, studying the local wildlife. But she found her passion when she came to live and work on North Ronaldsay, the northernmost island in the Orkney archipelago, known for its historic lighthouse, migratory bird life some very unusual sheep.

North Ronaldsay is home to North Ronaldsay sheep, an ancient breed that is thought to be one of the earliest to arrive in Britain, potentially during the Iron Age.

A 1.8m dyke (called the drystane dyke) completely encircles the island. It was built by the islanders in 1832 to keep the wild sheep on the foreshore, away from the cattle pasture and crofts inside. So without grass to graze on the North Ronaldsay sheep have evolved to subsist almost entirely on seaweed. Apart from the marine iguana, native to the Galapagos Islands, it is the only land animal known to have such a diet.

North Ronaldsay are small sheep, weighing only around 25-30kg , standing about 41cm at the shoulders. They were historically raised for their wool.

North Ronaldsay fleece is typically white or grey, but also comes in shades of browns, beiges, reds and blacks. A full fleece weighs about 1kg. It is a double-coated breed, meaning they have a soft wool undercoat and coarser overcoat.

Sian Tarrant's official job title is Sheep Dyke Warden. She spends her days checking and repairing the dyke, using traditional dry-stone walling techniques. She also helps manage the flock, who are shorn and their wool processed into yarn.

DYE PLANTS FOR THE MONTH - HEDERA

(1) CURRENTLY FLOWERING IS A YELLOW IVY. Known locally as Galloping-Susan. The heads of flowers if gathered and used fresh 1 lb of flower heads to 1 lb of wool, will give with an alum mordant a a very attractive yellow, which seems fairly fast to light.

(2) SOUR SOB - Ace tosellia Oxalis

This plant is flowering profusely along all the waste plots, and the flower heads given an excellent acid yellow color if an alum mordant is used. Rinse well.

(3) BRACKEN - Pteris Aquitina

The dark brown fronds are just appearing in the garden and it is these brown, young shoots which give the strongest and deepest shades of green. All mordants give good colors, again this dye appears fairly fast.

Treasures in the attic

The Salmon Brook Historical Society (based in the rural town of Salmon Brook, Connecticut, USA) was established in 1945, with the aim of preserving local history for future generations.

The loom in the attic: before.....

In 2019 the Historical Society was gifted an 18th century house and barn once owned by the Wilcox Family. When they inherited the property, they inherited a surprise – there was a loom in the barn attic. Well, what looked like a loom, and a pile of spools, tools, strangely shaped pieces of wood, strings and wires that the Society had no idea what to do with!

A search through local probate records for the Wilcox family found numerous references to a loom in household inventories dating from 1773 to 1877 – though there is no proof that all these records refer to the same loom, but it is possible. Interestingly, the first Wilcox to come to the New England colonies in 1635 was a linen weaver.

With the help of Nevan Carling from the Marshfield School of Weaving (www.marshfieldschoolofweaving.com) the Society pieced the loom back together, and learned a lot about it.

The oak loom is about 1.5m wide and was not built by a carpenter, but by a timber framer. It dates from the 1700's. It took Nevan and local volunteers two weeks to clean, oil and reassemble all the loom parts.

The Society have displayed the loom in the Wilcox house in its traditional location – not in the barn attic, but in one of the first-floor parlours of the house, near a window for light and sitting as close to the fireplace as possible to keep warm.

In addition to the loom itself, the Society discovered a complete weaver's workshop in the attic, which is impressive and rare. They have a very rare table for making heddles, wool and flax spinning wheels, a quilling wheel, and yarn winders. There is also a floor rug in the house that was made on the loom.

In the future the Salmon Brook Historical Society hope to find a weaving group to set up and use the loom.

....and after

Happy Year of the Ox!

According to the lunar calendar 2021 is the Year of the Ox.

The Ox follows on from the Year of the Rat, which is traditionally a year of turbulence, change and disasters (that sums 2020 up pretty well!)

The Year of the Ox is traditionally calm, stable, and economically prosperous—which sounds pretty good to me.

People born in the Year of the Ox (1925, 1937, 1949, 1961, 1973, 1985, 1997, 2009, 2021) are said to be honest, earnest, low key and never look for praise or to be the centre of attention. They gain recognition through their hard work, rarely lose their temper, think logically, and make great leaders. It sounds like Oxen would make great Guild members!
